Our hills were theirs; and we shall still remember
How they with us loved every mountain thing,
The rocks rain-silvered, heather in September,
The cold-wreathed cornice and the axe's ring.
Our hills are ours, free peaks and generous fountains,
Because they gave, and, giving, raised their eyes
Beyond the mist of death to nobler mountains
Above the sunlit crags of Paradise.
